Lessons from the Bench: What Recent WHS Prosecutions Teach Us

As WHS enforcement intensifies across Australia, recent court decisions are offering powerful lessons in compliance, accountability, and risk management. This session takes a deep dive into landmark prosecutions and emerging enforcement trends, revealing how regulators, courts, and legal precedent are shaping the future of workplace safety.

Attendees will gain insights into the legal reasoning behind key judgements, the types of breaches most likely to trigger prosecution, and the operational missteps that often lead organisations into legal trouble. From director liability to systemic failures, this session will explore what the bench is telling us and how businesses can respond.

Key discussion points include:

- What recent WHS prosecutions reveal about regulator priorities
- Common themes in enforcement actions and sentencing outcomes
- · How courts are interpreting "reasonably practicable" and duty of care
- Lessons for directors, officers, and safety leaders
- How to use legal precedent to strengthen your WHS governance

This session is essential for legal counsel, compliance officers, WHS professionals, and executives seeking to understand the real-world consequences of safety failures and how to avoid becoming the next case study.

10:40AM - 11:10AM

Session 3 11:10AM - 11:55AM

Category 1 Offences and Industrial Manslaughter in Focus

With industrial manslaughter laws now enacted across all Australian states and territories as of September 2024, the regulatory landscape has shifted dramatically. The introduction of these laws, most recently in NSW and Tasmania, signals a nationwide commitment to holding organisations and individuals accountable for the most serious breaches of workplace safety.

This session will explore the legal, operational, and reputation implications of Category 1 offences and industrial manslaughter, including:

- The legal thresholds and enforcement trends for Category 1 offences under WHS legislation
- Key lessons from landmark prosecutions
- The role of directors and officers in managing WHS risks and avoiding personal liability
- The shift from education to enforcement in high-risk sectors

Maximum penalties now reach up to:

- 25 years imprisonment for individuals
- $20 million fines for corporations (with NSW leading in severity)

This session is essential for legal counsel, compliance officers, executives, and safety professionals seeking to understand the real-world consequences of failing to manage workplace risks—and how to proactively protect their people and organisations.

Session 4 11:55AM - 12:40PM

Panel - Silicosis - From Zero to 100: A Case Study in Crisis-Driven Reform and Reputational Risk Management

This session uses silicosis as a case study to explore how unions, media, and advocacy can rapidly escalate a WHS issue and the complex challenges organisations face when managing the fallout.

Key themes include:

- How union-led investigations and media coverage exposed systemic failures, with silica exposure levels reaching 208 times the legal limit
- The speed of escalation: from isolated cases to 13 tunnel worker diagnoses, parliamentary disclosures, and national outrage within weeks
- The tension between privacy obligations and public interest in large-scale health disclosures
- Legal and reputation liability: what happens when WHS breaches become front-page news
- Crisis management strategies: how to respond when regulators, unions, and the public demand accountability
- · Broader implications for WHS governance, risk oversight, and board-level engagement

This session is essential for legal counsel, WHS leaders, communications teams, and executives seeking to understand how modern advocacy and public pressure shape regulatory outcomes, and how to prepare for the next crisis before it hits.

When the Inspector Calls: Responding to WHS Investigations with Confidence

Harold Downes Partner, Workplace Relations, Employment & Safety, Mills Oakley

A workplace visit from a WHS inspector can be routine, or it can mark the beginning of a formal investigation. How your organisation responds in those first moments can significantly influence the outcome, from compliance notices to potential enforcement action.

This session provides practical guidance on how to prepare for, respond to, and manage WHS inspections, drawing on real-world examples and lessons learned from recent cases across high-risk sectors. Whether triggered by an incident, complaint, or random audit, inspections are a critical moment for demonstrating your organisation's commitment to safety and compliance.

Session 6 2:10PM - 2:55PM

Managing Psychosocial Risk: Legal Duties, Enforcement Trends & System Maturity

DR. REBECCA MICHALAKManaging Director,
PsychSafe

Psychosocial risk is no longer a fringe issue, it's now central to workplace health and safety law.

In this session, Dr Rebecca Michalak will unpack the evolving legal duties around psychosocial hazards, including how regulators are interpreting and enforcing these obligations in 2025. Drawing on recent prosecutions, regulator guidance, and the NSW Code of Practice (with a refresh expected soon), this session will explore the maturation of psychosocial risk law from its early "embryo" stage to the complex "toddlerhood" organisations now face. Attendees will learn how to conduct dynamic, legally defensible risk assessments, understand the role of "state of knowledge" in enforcement, and adapt their systems to meet emerging expectations.

Key discussion points include:

- What psychosocial risk duties look like under current WHS law *How enforcement trends are evolving, and what triggers regulator action
- The importance of dynamic vs static risk assessments
- What hazards are being listed and prosecuted *How to future-proof your WHS system for psychosocial risk Lessons from the first wave of prosecutions and regulator commentary

Session 7 3:25PM - 4:10PM

Inside the Courtroom: Navigating WHS Prosecutions and Legal Processes

What does it really look like when a workplace safety breach ends up in court?

As WHS enforcement intensifies across Australia, with faster prosecution timelines, higher penalties, and increased scrutiny organisations must be prepared to navigate the legal process with confidence and clarity. This session offers a behind-the-scenes look at the legal journey of a WHS prosecution, from initial investigation to sentencing.

Key discussion points include:

- The step-by-step process: investigations, summons, hearings, and sentencing
- What to expect in court: timelines, legal strategy, and managing internal and external stakeholders
- The emotional and reputational toll on individuals and organisations
- How the reinstated Industrial Court of NSW is streamlining WHS prosecutions, with contested hearings or sentencing expected within six months of summons
- The role of regulators, unions, and media in shaping the courtroom narrative

This session is essential for legal counsel, executives, safety professionals, and HR leaders who want to understand the full scope of WHS legal exposure—and how to proactively manage risk before it becomes a courtroom reality.
